Tis better far to join the throng That do their duty right along: Reluctant they to raise a fuss, or make themselves ridiculous. Calm and serene in heart and nerve, Their strength is always in reserve, And nobly stands each test; And every day and all about, By scenes within and scenes without, We can discern, with ne'er a doubt, That quiet ways are best.

-----Katie's Part.

"What have you done, dear children?"
The mother gently said,
As she kissed her white-robed babes at night,
And tucked them up in bed;
"What have you done through all this day
To help some one along the way?"

Then each one told of some kind deed—
A loving word just spoken,
Some sacrifice for others' wants,
Or gift of friendly token.
But when 'twas Katle's turn to speak
A tear-drop glistened on her cheek.

'I cannot think of any thing So very good to-day."
She sadly said, "only I helped
A chicken find its way
Back to its mother—that was all;
But it was lost, and O so small!

"'Twas naughty when it ran away;
But, dear mannia, I know
It felt so sorry, for it tried
The right way back to go.
You told us once we ought to seek
To save the lost ones and the weak.

"The little chicken looked distressed, And how it cried, poor thing! It was so glad to cuddle up Under its mother's wing.

And I was happy when I found
"Twas there with her, all safe and sound."

The children hid their smiles beneath The children hid their sinites occurred.
The bed's white coverlet;
But the mother kissed her Katle
Just where the cheek was wet.
"Your part," said she, "you, too, have done;
God is well pleased, my little one."
